HP hosts candidates Forum emblematic of mayoral race

Matthew MacDonald
Staff Reporter

Last Thursday, June 5, the latest mayoral candidate forum was held in Hyde Park. Co-sponsored by the Hyde Park Neighborhood Association (HPNA) and The Pryde (LGBTQ Senior Housing), the event – scheduled for an hour-and-a-half – featured all four candidates on the ballot.

That noted, Mayor Michelle Wu was absent for the first 45 minutes of it.

“As people know, there was a major event this evening,” moderator and HPNA President Mimi Turchinetz explained to the audience of approximately 150 people who had gathered in the community center of The Pryde (59 Harvard Ave.). “[State Representative] Rob Consalvo had a big summer event, so the Mayor was there. My understanding is she is also on her way.”

The conflicting event she was referring to – Consalvo’s “Summer Celebration” – was held at the Elks Lodge in West Roxbury (about a four-mile drive from The Pryde) from 5:30 p.m.-7:30 p.m.

The forum was scheduled from 7 p.m.-8:30 p.m.

According to organizers, the HPNA had first reached out to Wu’s campaign in April about scheduling and its invitation was declined about a week before the forum. However, after offering to be more flexible about the Mayor’s arrival time, its invitation was accepted on June 3 for 7:30 p.m. on June 5.

The forum’s announced setup called for opening statements from the candidates, followed by questions from the moderator, then questions from the audience, and then closing statements.

Robert Cappucci, Domingos DaRosa, and Josh Kraft are the candidates challenging Wu.

Cappucci touted his record (www.bobcappucciformayor.org) as a real estate developer from East Boston who is also a former Boston Police officer and a former School Committee member. He also referred to his submarine service in the U.S. Navy, and to his time as a Boston Public Schools (BPS) substitute teacher. His main talking point was to constructively communicate with Washington D.C., and the current administration, to obtain more federal funding to address the city’s needs.

Hyde Park’s DaRosa (www.darosaforboston.org) is a Hyde Park resident and a 23-year staff member of Boston’s Centers for Youth and Families (BCYF). For 17 years, he also served as the president of Local 888/BCYF Chapter of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU). Beyond that, he was a co-founder of the South End-Roxbury Community Partnership and emphasized his lifelong dedication to his community and city through his grassroots activism and organizing.

Kraft (www.joshforboston.com) – whose home address is in the North End – spoke of his 35 years working in and around the city’s neighborhoods, including his 12 years as president and CEO of the Boys & Girls Clubs of Boston, during which time he expanded its reach into Jamaica Plain, Roslindale and Mattapan. While acknowledging his privileged upbringing, he repeatedly stated his priority of involving and including Boston’s residents in his mayoral decision making.

Of the four questions asked by Turchinetz, two had to do with zoning and development reform under Wu’s administration. The first addressed, in part, the Squares + Streets (S+S) initiative to increase residential height and density by the rezoning of neighborhood business districts. The second dealt with City Hall’s proposed changeover from impact advisory groups (IAGs) – currently used for large scale (Article 80) developments – to Community Advisory Teams.

The HPNA and other local community groups have been pushing back against S+S and the rezoning of Cleary Square for the last year-and-a-half, so those questions were not surprising.

In their answers to both, all three challengers stressed step-by-step community involvement, with DaRosa going one step further in stating that he was in favor of an elected building planning committee to provide a greater degree of accountability in the development process.

Mayor Wu hadn’t yet arrived, so she didn’t have to address the room regarding her policies. In fact, she was so late that all but one of the questions that she fielded were asked by the audi-

On Monday, the voices of more than 1,000 residents, union leaders, protesters and elected officials reverberated off the walls surrounding City Hall Plaza to demand the release of David Huerta, president of Service Employees International Union (SEIU) California.

Huerta was arrested on Friday while protesting outside a business where federal immigration agents were investigating. He was later released from federal custody on Monday evening on a $50,000 bond after a hearing in federal court.

But as Boston Trades Union representative Chaton Green said, it’s not just about Huerta.

“We’re here in solidarity to fight for the freedom of David Huerta, but not just for him, but for everyone who’s been wrongfully detained,” he said. “We’re here to make our voices loud and proud and hopeful. But hope is not silent. Hope fights. Hope is loud as well, and we would not let this unjust act continue any further.”

West Roxbury Roslindale Progressives organizer Nancy Wilson said she and other members trucked over to City Hall with short notice.

“We’re here in solidarity with SEIU and all the other unions across

Mayor Wu visits with the JPNC

Richard Heath
Staff Reporter

Boston Mayor Michelle Wu became the second mayor – after Marty Walsh in April 2020 – to visit the Jamaica Plain Neighborhood Council (JPNC) when she joined the May 27 monthly call.

The Bulletin learned a week later that the mayor’s office called council chair Renee Stacey Welch on May 26 and asked to be on the May 27 meeting agenda. This did seem to be an election year visit; the mayor has been making the rounds.

As reported by The Bulletin,

Wu joined the in-person West Roxbury Business and Professional Association on May 14 discussing among other things ADU’s, a senior center for West Roxbury and the MBTA.

The mayor did bring a few senior staff with her to the JPNC meeting.

In addition to Caroline Peters, the Mayor’s Office of Neighborhood Services JP liaison who always attends council meetings, the country who are being treated unfairly by this administration's outrageous ICE policies," she said. "It's unheard of, it's wrong, it's un-American and we have to stand up."

Wilson said she was heartened by the turnout, as they had only a couple of days to organize.

"This was an emergency turnout; we only had a two-day notification and there is still a very, very large crowd here, and I think that's a good sign of how seriously we take these violations against our rights," she said.

The WR/Ros Progressives will have a showing at the June 14 No Kings Rally on the Boston Common this weekend. Wilson added that the Tesla Takedown in Dedham will continue this Saturday from 11 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Jamaica Plain Progressives member and retired SEIU member Tim Dean said they have to stand up now and rip the bandage off quickly, because it's only going to get worse.

"It's about the rights of people to live in a society where they're not attacked, arrested or intimidated," he said. "This is an attack on all that we stand for. It's an attack on the labor movement, on social communities, everyday people, and if we don't stand up to it we're going to sink further and further into a dangerous moment, if we're not there already."

Dean said he's not losing hope. "I don't give up hope, but I think it's going to take a lot more than gatherings," he said. "Gatherings are good though, because they build association and community. The one thing these authoritarians want is for us to feel isolated and powerless. If we feel powerless, we won't be able to do anything. Same thing in Germany, Hungary, with Mussolini, it's the same stages and people have to stand up with every association they have, unions, churchs, community groups, choirs, it doesn't matter. You have to stand together, speak out and take action."

District 5 City Councilor Enrique Pepén was on hand at the rally. "I was honored to join the rally in support of SEIU's David Huerta because standing up for labor leaders who fight for working people is not just right—it's necessary. The federal government's actions against him are shameful, politically motivated, and an attack on the labor movement itself. Our people deserve better, David Huerta deserves better, and I'm calling on our federal government to release him immediately."

SEIU Committee for Interns and Residents Vice President Dr. Brett Lewis said she has seen first-hand the damage the administration's aggressive immigration enforcement policies are causing.

"Right now, my patients are afraid to come to the hospital because they fear being picked up by ICE on the way. They are foregoing prenatal care and avoiding going to the emergency room. People's diabetes and hypertension are going untreated," she said. "The current administration wants us to be afraid. They know what they are doing is morally reprehensible, and so their only strategy is to make us so afraid so we don't fight back."

A chorus of agreement came from the crowd.

"But power doesn't panic," Lewis said. "They want us to believe they hold all the power and we hold none. Power doesn't panic, and right now what we're seeing around the country with ICE agents coming out to abduct a single child or a mother, with the deployment of the National Guard in Los Angeles. With the arrest of David Huerta, an advocate for workers rights, immigrants and free speech, that is our administration panicking. And in turn, we are witnessing true power. The power of communities coming out to protect their neighbors from ICE. The power of workers fighting to protect Medicaid. The power of those sailing the Mediterranean in the name of freedom, and the power of every single person standing up in the face of injustice and saying, 'No more.'"

SEIU Local 888 President John McKeever said all those who may speak up are at risk. "The lanterns at the Great North Church are lit; one if by land, two if by D.C.!" he said. "Federal agents are scooping up our members off the streets. A tyrannical government is striking away our constitutional freedoms and inalienable rights. Rights everyone is born with. Members being unlawfully detained and SEIU leaders being unlawfully detained."

"Where are David Huerta's rights, I ask you?" he said. "Set him free!"

ence.

The open floor portion of the evening ran for nearly an hour (the forum was extended by about 25 minutes), and a line of attendees formed to ask their questions of the four candidates.

The first one that all four had the opportunity to answer focused on sanctuary cities:

Wu (www.michelleforboston.com) – who lives in Roslindale – noted in the last 10 seconds of her opening statement that her administration is in five lawsuits against the Trump administration.

Kraft said that it was "reprehensible" to pull immigrants from their houses of worship, workplaces, and schools with no connection to violent crime "just because they're not from here" and pledged to stand by the immigrant community "day in and day out."

Cappucci and DaRosa took a similarly different view from Wu and Kraft.

"I'm all for trying to work with the federal law enforcement, the state law enforcement, and the local law enforcement," Cappucci said. "We do not have that. I believe we need that."

DaRosa spoke in detail of the risks of being a sanctuary city. "We cut ourselves from being able to negotiate with the federal government on how we go about supporting the federal laws that exist for this country to keep everybody safe," he said, adding that, by keeping the line of communication open, it is easier to understand and resolve issues. "Now we have no clue what's being done and how it's being done. We're getting the aftermath of seeing what's going on."

Another question asked for five things each would do to improve the Boston Public Schools:

Wu noted ongoing work on facilities improvement, early college and career support, youth sports as part of the curriculum, advanced math programs, and partnerships with outside institutions.

DaRosa said that he would combine the BPS with the BCYF, stop closing schools, unify teachers, open all pools in the summer, and engage parents regarding individual education plans.

Kraft proposed adding elected members to the School Committee, increasing the elementary level literacy rates by 10 percent through high-dosage tutoring, making mental health a priority, creating vocational hubs across the school system, and investing in Madison Park.

Cappucci was speaking of a partnership with the Boston Police Academy to work with what he deemed to be the approximately 10 percent of problem BPS students when Turchinetz called time on him (such a regular occurrence during the forum that it finally morphed into a gag).

Shortly after that, Kraft apologetically excused himself. It was 8:30 p.m. and he explained that his daughter was in town from LA, performing, and that he really wanted to catch her last set.

Although the forum went on for another 25 minutes (the candidates' closing statements got axed), Wu's late arrival from the Elks, Kraft's departure for the Seaport, and the generally disjointed nature of the proceedings all made quietly loud statements about this mayoral race.

Roslindale farmers market opens

Susan Kryczka
Staff Reporter

The official opening of the 2025 Roslindale Farmers Market on Saturday, June 7 at Adams Park kicked off successfully with Mayor Michelle Wu on hand to cut the ribbon, a steady stream of shoppers who kept vendors busy, and the heaviest of the rainfall holding off until early afternoon.

"The Roslindale Farmer's Market has been around since the 1980s. We are a very long-tenured market," said Madison Danis, marketing lead for Roslindale Village Mains Streets (RVMS), the city sponsor of the market. The market's popularity has remained high every year, meeting its goal to bring local fresh food to the community. Its mission overlaps with that of RVMS to encourage people to come, eat, play, and enjoy Roslindale Village Square with free kids' entertainment, live music, and wellness activities also offered. Despite the small area, between 30-40 vendors are available for patrons each Saturday.

Danis says the future holds even more plans. "We're really hoping in the next few years we can pilot closing a section of Popular Street so we can spill out on the street and have things like more performances and food trucks, if the City of Boston helps us with some of that permitting." Danis estimated that on a typical market Saturday, attendance is about 3,000. "It is a testament to what a staple the market is to the Roslindale community."

Vendors and shoppers were equally enthusiastic about the market and the Roslindale community itself. Kim Gregory, of Pure Pastry, barely had time to talk, as there were already seven customers in line at the 9 a.m. opening to buy her muffins, scones, and cookies. She's been selling at the market for over eight years.

"I have to say this is amazing. The first year, it was like I found my home. I come here and I'm in the country. The people ... I am just so well-received. It's family. They all

There had to be a certain amount of irony here—or was it coincidence? When Carl Johnson passed away at Beth Israel on a Monday morning, that was the day the two Boston newspapers featured the results of statewide outdoor track meets, which were of no small interest to him because of his high school days competing in that sport at White Stadium and other venues hosting the St. John's Relays and state competitions.

In his high school days Carl—his actual name was Carleton—was a great middle-distance runner, but, more importantly, he was also a member of that school's storied 4 x 100 relay team, competing—very successfully he would add—in the Boston City League meets against such track statewide powerhouses then as Boston English, Boston Tech, and Boston Trade.

The secret to success in this shortest of relays is in the hand-offs, wherein fractions of a second are gained or lost, and his relay team would ignore the admonition of its track coach, Father Morris, who mistakenly thought that receiving runners should not be in motion when receiving the baton. Carl and his three relay teammates fortunately ignored the advice of this avuncular, stocky Jesuit priest, whose forte on Morrissey Boulevard was the teaching of math.

Track was the favorite sport of this Roslindale-born kid of Swedish father and an Irish mother. At Boston College as a day-hop, he did not participate, concentrating on getting a degree in education. This enabled him to teach in the Boston Public Schools where he taught for more than 40 years at South Boston High School, including during its tumultuous years warranting national attention.

Carl's claim to fame—he never actually called it that—was his 40+ years of teaching marine science at South Boston High School. He never was able to

of Town/

complete his memoirs about teaching on Telegraph Hill during the height—or is it nadir?—of desegregation. He was right there in the middle of it for all the violence-torn days, including the gory stabbing of Michael Faith whose spewing blood stained Carl's clothes. He amassed numerous grants enabling his teenage students from both Roxbury and South Boston to walk in the mudflats of Plum Island to appreciate nature more as well as to spend overnights in sloops coming up the East Coast, experiences which they otherwise never would have had.

Carl was interviewed for hours by Channel 2's Frontline or Nova as it sought to tell the story on the 50th anniversary of Boston school desegregation. His easygoing conversation went on for several hours as he related all sorts of background and daily events to the news crews. Regrettably most of that, as they used to say, is on the cutting room floor as the actual aired episodes not always captured the omissions, nuances, and full truths.

A dedicated member of St. John Chrysostom's St. Vincent de Paul Society for decades, he leaves behind his South Boston-born wife, Linda, and his two Boston Latin School graduate sons, David and Matthew. Boston is a lesser city without Carl. But may his indomitable, upbeat spirit live on.

RE: "HP HEALTH CENTER HEARING JUN 12"

To the Editor:

It would seem appropriate for the state's two massive healthcare provider systems, Mass General Brigham (MGB) and Beth Israel Lahey (BIL), to help meet Hyde Park's pressing needs.

Beth Israel Deaconess-Milton Hospital (BIL), Brigham and Women's Faulkner Hospital (MGB) and the now-shuttered Carney Hospital are all situated similar distances from Hyde Park. Carney, of course, was part of failed Steward Health Care, but Faulkner and Milton remain robust outposts of MGB and BIL respectively. Given the high proportion of low-income and immigrant populations in the Hyde Park portion of their service areas, the two systems could jointly contribute resources to help establish a community health center or at least to support aggressive programming to address the high rates of infant mortality and chronic diseases cited. Although they are often fierce competitors, it would be great to see them work together for the benefit of Hyde Park residents.

there were Boston Planning Department Deputy Director Devin Quirk, Lindsay Santana, director of neighborhood services and Brianna Millor, chief of community engagement. District 6 City Councilor Ben Weber was also on the call. Millor flooded the chat with clarifications, add ons and links to various websites to support the mayor's remarks. The mayor opened her remarks saying "I'm happy to be here at this historic organization."

Wu said she was working on "some big picture policies, standing up to this hostile administration" while at the same time, "working on day-to-day issues putting forward solutions for schools, streets, housing and city-wide planning."

Wu said she wanted to keep this "an open call, any issue, big and small."

First-time caller Kiera Mark wanted to know the status of housing "with the potential of funding loss."

Wu said "we're trying our best to fill in the gaps. Forty-eight-million dollars in direct funding for homeless is locked up. HUD funding is on pause," she said. Wu said she was prioritizing a February program where the city buys up "private market rentals and sells to non profits to keep rents low."

"Banks and other funders, the Boston Foundation, partnerships with hospitals [have created] a new revolving fund, insuring that rents are stable and controllable."

"A lot of wait and see how bad it gets," the mayor said, predicting, "It will get worse before it gets better."

Caliga from Burnett Street was up next with an array of issues. "I supported you during your campaign, I passed out flyers, but I'm very disappointed in your promises for the greening of Boston," she said. "Copley Square has less trees. It's a heat island."

"I'm opposed to White Stadium, cutting down trees for a beer garden. It's not greening. White Stadium is used by marginalized people."

"Squares and Streets? It's taking away peoples voices. That will disappear."

"I don't want your legacy to be tarnished."

Wu replied. "I want to make sure the facts are out there," she said, "where we disagree. Copley Square. It's going to get greener, there will be a significant increase in the number of trees. Copley Square was a multi-year process before our administration; open hardscape was part of its design. But more trees are coming, 62 new trees. There are 36 now. Planting needs warmer weather. Wait and see what's growing this fall."

"The greenspace [lawn] was relocated in front of the church [Trinity Church] that they asked for. We're not done yet. Just wait," Wu said.

"White Stadium? This is opening up more greenspace. Well over an acre that's been closed for decades; completely opened up that space that's been fenced off. This will be The Grove. During game days it will be fenced to serve alcohol, the rest of the year completely open. Three hundred days, 16 hours a day open to the community, including the fenced-off area. Paths will be improved," Wu said.

Wu said the city is getting a new stadium at "half the sticker price," emphasizing that the Women's Soccer League will pay for "complete maintenance" of the stadium.

"One dollar per ticket will go for a tree fund to plant 500 trees [in the Playstead]," Wu said.

Addressing the criticism for a less expensive alternative, the mayor responded that "the Women Soccer Team has made their own decision."

"We didn't twist their arms," Wu said, "White Stadium is just the right size for them. They did not want to share a stadium with a men's team. They did not want to be second fiddle."

Addressing School Street resident and council member Peter DeCotis' concerns about parking ("a big challenge finding parking") the mayor said, "The transportation plan has obligations for all parties."

"I'll follow up on your concerns," Wu promised.

Wu admitted what every Parkside neighbor has known for decades, "there's never been a real transportation plan for large events—all different sizes of events." Wu said part of the "[transportation] legal discussions will be vetted in the White Stadium neighborhood council".

In March, the mayor and the Boston Unity Soccer Partners announced the 12-member White Stadium Neighborhood Council which is heavy on business-oriented group representatives, no one from the Egleston Square community and only one park advocate, The Franklin Park Coalition. Danielle Summer Keita, chair of the JP Housing Committee said, "Housing is a complex issue. The [Planning Department] anti-displacement plan is absent of rent control. Rep [Samantha] Montano has a rent control bill.

"Right now we can't build our way out of the housing crisis, we need rent control."

Mayor Wu admitted it's frustrating. "Yes I've been clear about affordable rents," she said. The mayor said she prefers rent stabilization to stop the worst offenders. "Rent stabilization passed the city council, but went nowhere at the state," Wu said.

Mark Freuderberger said he had concerns about Jamaica Pond. "Jamaica Pond and Olmsted Park continue to be used by a lot of people, but this has environmental impacts," he said.

He went on to say he was very happy to learn of the new arborists the mayor referred to earlier about White Stadium. "I'd like to meet the them," he said, and show our perspective and come up with a joint assessment.

"We want to try and raise money [for the parks] from the public." "Let's sit down with the Parks Dept.," Freuderberger said.

The mayor has not yet appointed a new park commissioner; the position has been open for six months.

"Top line goals? Invasive species, erosion on paths, pruning of trees," Freuderberger said.

"This is great," Wu said, "Let's set that [meeting] up."

A caller named Kim said they were worried that parking restrictions for White Stadium would put "local businesses like Midway Café out of business." Wu agreed to "go out and meet with Midway and other businesses" to hear their concerns.

The clock was ticking and council vice chair Bernie Doherty cut off the mayor. "We have to go on to other business", thanking her for speaking with the council.

Garden club's plant sale blooms

Cultivating one's social life and garden don't need to be mutually exclusive. Members of the Evening Garden Club in West Roxbury know this and to entice new members while boosting enthusiasm for plants, the group hosted its first plant sale of the year at the West Roxbury Branch of the Boston Public Library, June 7, scheduled 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Despite the rain forcing an early end, most of the sales took place in the beginning half.

Interest in gardening has always been around in the neighborhood, but the ladies from this garden club seemed to understand the importance of cultivating a good foundation in organization. While a garden club already existed, it was during the day, challenging for women with jobs during typical hours. The Evening Garden Club of West Roxbury began in 1996 by Sharon Dwyer and Marcia Stephensen who originally met at Home Depot in the garden section and then expanded their interest in plants by visiting nurseries and local gardens. While the founders have moved on, their legacy continues. The Evening Garden Club joined the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts (GCFM) in 1997, which is headquartered in Wellesley and represents 177 garden clubs, assisting with horticulture, landscape and floral design.

The West Roxbury group maintains beautiful green areas in the city, such as outside West Roxbury's library. The group's members range in knowledge and experience. Ann Hopps Morgan was the "expert" gardener on site, according to garden club president, Barbara Menard. Morgan and Menard are also members of the Massachusetts Master Gardener Association, which is a separate group where one needs training to join – unlike the Evening Garden Club, which is more of a social group for people to broaden their knowledge.

The standout member of the group seemed to be Betty Barry, according to fellow member Lois Baho, while many other members called Barry's name to answer questions. Barry is the corresponding secretary and joined the group years ago while taking care of her sick mother. She said she would hide in the back of the room until one day she formed connections and people started offering her volunteer opportunities. She also used to be a photographer for the city's Boston Seniority Magazine, thus becoming the organization's unofficial photographer. She said she even helped organize pictures for this Bulletin article. She also taught her granddaughter to sew, after she noticed her peers on TikTok.

"She wanted to be like a TikTok star," Barry said smiling. Barry designed the decorative and cheerful table cloths for the event.

The women of the group moved seamlessly around one another, picking up on cues of what was needed before even being asked. Most of the sales took place in the morning, Baho said. "We got a really good response, lots of questions and interest on how the plants are going to look, instructions on care and just general guidance." Nancy Clemens, vice president of the club, said "we were a little nervous. We didn't know if we had enough plants."

Some came from a nursery, Pioneer Farms in Walpole, while many were "friendship plants," donated by members. The two biggest sellers were coleus and sun patiens. Coleus are a tropical native plant to Asia, known for its colorful foliage and low maintenance, and can be either annual or perennial depending on its shrub. Sun patiens are annuals and a hybrid of two wild impatiens known for their vibrant colors, hardiness and ability to thrive in full sun. Some of the plants for sale included: black eyed susans (a North American flowering perennials), suntory (high heat tolerance and vibrant colors), coral bells (bell-shaped perennials), sun patiens, coleus and assorted 4" annuals.

Based on the success, the group intends on having more plant sales in the fall and spring, Menard said. Julie Moran of West Roxbury, who saw notices for the plant sale on social media, said, "I have a lack of knowledge of native plants and want to convert to native. My girls love planting." She also wanted to support the community. Moran's family looked happy as each member walked away with a plant.

Barry noted that some of the native plants support the bee, insect and bird populations in the area. For anyone interested in attending a meeting, guests are welcome, Menard said. A $5 donation is a suggestion, not a requirement.

"Even though the group is long-established, it is still vibrant, active and open to new ideas and members. I am pleased by how members pulled together in terms of donating from their own gardens as well as organizing the event. It warms my heart, giving of their time," Morgan said. Clemens said she took pleasure in the continuation of enjoying Mother Nature. "People can take what we give them and put them in their gardens."

Ever heard of the moon flower? It blooms at night and is the flower that represents the Evening Garden Club, which meets monthly and includes speakers who broaden the group's knowledge base of plants. Garden tours occur every other year, as the group's fundraiser. The next tour will be in 2026. For more information, visit gcfm.org. Membership is $50.

Dil Zihri, owner of Olive World and known as "Olive Man" was setting up his Moroccan olives, olive oil, and specialty foods at his tent. "Moroccan—it's the best," he said. This is his third year, and he sells at different markets six days a week. "I'll be honest with you; this is my best market. It's so nice, so cool, so chatty. They love to support you. I love to give them some good quality stuff, too."

Jeff Hale of Boston Smoked Fish Company was busy stacking his table. "It's a great community, lots of diversity and there is definitely a need for superior products." He offered an assortment of seafood. "We have smoked salmon, salmon burgers, bluefish pâté, gravlax, and whitefish salad." He said his sales style is "hope for the best and just be friendly!"

The market attracts families, singles, dogs and their owners, young, old and everyone in between. Stephen and Joelle, friends from daycare, came with their families and attend the market often. "We come most weeks. We like to get some plants and vegetables, coffee, we're also excited about all the shows. There are karate demonstrations, clowns. It's a good day," said Stephen. Joelle added, "We always get pastries from Pure Pastry. It's delicious, it takes a long time for the line, but she greets everyone. It's very tasty."

Stefanie and her husband are from Hyde Park and fans of the sausage sold by the Lilac Hedge Farm of Rutland MA. "It's good stuff. It's a little more expensive, but it's good stuff." The free activities for their two children is a main motivation for coming. Laurie, carrying two bags of produce, tries to come to the market every week by walking the mile from her home, often with her dogs. "I love the vibe. I've lived in the city more than half my life. I love Roslindale. It brings everybody here and it's wonderful. I start walking in the morning with at least one of my dogs and end up here."

Marc and Megan Kaufman have been shopping at the market for 17 years and also live in Roslindale. They do their specialty shopping at the market. "Fresh broccoli, green beans and smoked salmon," said Marc. "When the kids were little, we came for the activities, clowns," said Megan. The connection to the market can be an emotional one. "It pulls at the heart strings when you miss the farmer's market," said Marc.

Some neighbors make getting to the market a top priority. "I was in New York City for work, and I literally changed my train times so I could get home for the Roslindale Farmer's Market," said Becca Gutman.

Mayor Wu arrived in time to say a few words and cut the ribbon to officially open the market's season before the heavy rains opened up. Holding her five-month-old daughter Mira, she thanked everyone for making the opening day a success. "A shout out to each and every one of you for making Roslindale who we are and an example of what's possible when we keep believing in our neighbors, keep creating opportunities for everyone and focus on local, fresh and healthy. Thank you for creating spaces for families to thrive." The market is open every Saturday, rain or shine, from 9:00 a.m. – 1:30 p.m.

dren, Lale and Hayal. He also leaves behind many loving relatives and friends in the United States, Ireland and Sweden. Carl graduated from BC High and Boston College and later, earned an M.Ed. from the State College of Boston and a CAGS from Suffolk University. For nearly 40 years, he taught marine science at South Boston High School and was known for his hands-on field trips, notably his open-sea voyages aboard the Spirit of Massachusetts. In 2021, Carl was inducted into the Massachusetts Hall of Fame for Science Educators. Way back in the 1990s, he used to host a weekly episode of Extra Help in Science on Boston's Cablevision. He was a member of many other organizations, including the Boston Teachers Union, Massachusetts Marine Educators, Audubon Society, New England Aquarium, the Castle Island Association. He tutored at the West Roxbury Public Library, volunteered with the St. Vincent de Paul Society at St. John Chrysostom Church and served as a Boy Scout leader with Troop 1, West Roxbury. Carl loved spending his free time birdwatching and talking Boston sports. He was a proud 30-year season ticket holder of the New England Revolution, going back to the very start of the league. He ran the Boston Marathon more than once and volunteered with the race for over 25 years. He loved his time out on the Boston Harbor Islands and attending events for his grandchildren at Boston Latin School and the British International School of Boston. He loved his family deeply and was especially proud to have been welcomed into the Mackie family through his marriage to Linda. Their acceptance meant a great deal to him and he was proud to be part of their lives. Funeral from the Gormley Funeral Home, 2055 Centre Street, WEST ROXBURY. In lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to the St. Vincent de Paul Society at St. John Chrysostom Church or honor Carl's memory by sharing a story about him at storiesforpapaj@gmail.com. His family wishes to thank you for your kindness during this difficult time. Your words, hugs and presence have truly helped us as we grieve. Carl carried kindness in everything he did. We will miss him deeply. William J. Gormley Funeral Service 617-323-8600.
