Two Jamaica Plain institutions, one old the other a new arrival, Allandale Farm and Youth Enrichment Services, made news in January.

As first reported by The Bulletin in September 2024, Allandale Farm plans to expand, and on Jan. 17 it filed a small project review with the City of Boston Planning Department (CBPD) “to modernize the retail activities... essential to the Farm’s needs.”

“The goal is to enhance the availability of seasonal retail farm operations in the city to a year-round producer...and to maintain the Farm as uniquely rural.”

IAG, residents positive about Great Scott plan

Public meeting set for Feb. 24

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Impact Advisory Group (IAG) set up for the Great Scott building redevelopment at 1 Harvard Ave. in Allston had fairly positive comments on Monday night.

The City of Boston Planning Department (CBPD) hosted the IAG with the intent of getting feedback. The plan is to leverage 139 rental residential units to allow Great Scott to reopen on the site, while also allowing O’Brien’s small apartments with relatively low rents are preferable to having multiple roommates, which is a common occurrence in Allston Brighton.

Pub – which is currently on the site – to remain.

No parking and no multi-bedroom units are included. All units proposed are one-bedroom or studios. Noannet Group’s Jordan Warshaw said this was because residents looking to live above a music venue with no room for a car are not likely to be family-minded. He also said that such prospective renters, in his experience, prefer smaller apartment spaces with, hopefully, smaller rents. What was not said but could reasonably be assumed is that

Former Great Scott owner Carl Lavin spoke during the presentation and said he joined with Warshaw and Redefined firm representative Paul Armstrong because he wanted to see the legendary music venue make a return to Allston Rock City. He said he’s been with Great Scott for almost 25

S+S closeout hears displacement, parking concerns

Zoning map expected this week

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The City of Boston Planning Department (CBPD) met with about 60 residents in a virtual setting last week for the closeout meeting of the Roslindale Squares+Streets (S+S) plan process.

This is not, by any means, the end of the public process. The design plan has been formulated, according to the CBPD, to first collect public input and set out the priorities on the first draft of the zoning map. The zoning map will be the actual change to the underlying zoning of Roslindale Square and its close surroundings, and will choose zoning based on the S0-S5 districts laid out previously in the overall S+S process (<https://tinyurl.com/55vx3t6z>). CBPD representatives said there will be at least four public meetings on the zoning map when it is released, along with presentations to community groups and other outreach opportunities.

The plan has changed since it was last presented in January. For one thing, CBPD Deputy Director of Planning James Fitzgerald said the proposed changes to Poplar Street will not result in a no-vehicle stretch of Poplar Street at Roslindale Square. They received a lot of comments from the community in support of changing the nearby Washington Street corridor from one-way to two-ways, lessening the traffic burden on Poplar, as now southbound traffic has to loop through Poplar to continue towards Hyde Park and West Roxbury.

“With the restoration of a two-way Washington Street we’re pulling off all of that through traffic,” he said. “With a lot less volume there and having just local access needs on Poplar, it allows for a much more calmer street, a lot more opportunities for making pedestrian safety improvements and de-stresses that road for bikes and peds, and also provides the flexibility for further programming as it relates to Adams Park.”

The closeout also details “Community Vision” plans, which give kind of a bird’s-eye view of what the community plan will be looking for when zoning districts are considered. There were two options. Community Vision 1 will focus completely on increasing density in the commercial core of Roslindale Square and only allow for a maximum of four stories within that zone. Community Vision 2 “maximizes housing growth opportunities across the entire study area, in-

Street is 105 acres, but Jamaica Plain and Parkway residents are very familiar with the two acres of retail store (Market Barn), greenhouses and outdoor yards of shrubs and trees and seasonal Christmas trees behind the old Allandale Street stone wall.

Allandale Farm is managed by Helen Glotzer and owned by the Allandale Realty Trust. The Farm, as explained in the filing, "specializes in annual and perennial plants, cut flowers and vegetables, pumpkins, fresh native turkeys and Christmas trees as well as a retail store for milk, cider, pies and jams and garden supplies."

The Market Barn and three greenhouses will be replaced by two buildings: one a consolidated greenhouse, designed by Union Architects of Providence and landscaped by Klopfen Martin Design Group with Emily Scarfe as project manager.

A new Market Barn, built on the footprint of the old one, will be designed as a two-story, 5,300-square-foot gabled barn with a cupola designed for cold storage commercial space and a small kitchen.

A new single greenhouse with four, pitch-roofed glass bays will be built, "as a single, more efficient retail greenhouse directly adjacent to the Market Barn."

A 55-foot-wide over-look deck between and at the rear of the two buildings will project towards the existing ponds and upland woods.

At the eastern edge of the market barn and retail greenhouses will be an eight-foot improved road to connect with the back production green house (built in 2015) at the property line with Brookline.

There will be 50 parking spaces – about the same as the current number – and the entrance and exit will remain the same. The wooden barn for the resident black Highland steers, Curtis and Willard, will be moved back.

The area near the entrance gate to the cider house built into the wooded slope will be rebuilt as offices.

Allandale Farm is thoroughly protected by a Conservation Protection Sub-district of Jamaica Plain, Greenbelt Overlay District and an Agricultural Preservation Restriction held by the Trustees of Reservations. It requires one zoning variance because retail agriculture is a non-conforming use.

A virtual CBPD public meeting is scheduled for the Allandale Farm modernization on Monday, Feb. 24, at 6 p.m. (bit.ly/3PS3oP).

At The Bulletin deadline, news leaked out about another JP institution on Allandale Street: Faulkner Hospital. The new garage built out of the hillside has already opened; according to hospital communications an opening day ceremony for its new in-patient wing will be discussed at an internal staff meeting on Feb. 13.

Across town, an institution founded in 1968 and long located in the South End will soon move to JP. Three years, seven months and one abutters lawsuit later, Youth Enrichment Services (YES) finally broke ground for its new headquarters at 267 Amory Street at noon on Jan. 29.

"Our new headquarters will enhance our programs and allow us to inspire more Boston youth," Executive Director Brian Van Dorpe said in a press release.

YES provides sports-based activities for over 1200 young people a year.

These programs were reduced after the abutter's lawsuit was settled in March 2022 reducing the YES building to three stories; the adjacent residential building was also lowered and reduced from nine to six stories. The lawsuit-imposed height changes required architect Bill Mensinger of EMBARC to reconfigure the interior spaces of each building.

The new headquarters will be called the YES Yawkey Youth Development Center to recognize the $1 million contribution to the $10.4 million capital campaign. The sale of the YES building at 412 Mass Ave that went on the market January 31 will add to the fund.

The City of Boston contributed $400,000 of CPA funds to the campaign. Pedro Cruz, Director of the Boston Office of Youth Engagement, was at the groundbreaking but was not introduced. Instead of the usual speakers' program, only the YES board chair Geoff Soper, with Van Dorpe standing off to the side, gave brief remarks.

"This celebrates the groundbreaking of the Yawkey Center for youth 7 to 18," Soper, who works at Merrill Lynch, said. A three-story building. We've raised 67percent of the total campaign fund."

Alicia Verity, the new CEO of the Yawkey Foundation, was at the Jan. 29 ceremony. Soper then introduced 10 groups for 10 separate shovel-and-hardhat photo opportunities along a rim of sand. Soper called up each group individually for photographs.

The groups included Group C for $1 million donors, Group D for $250,000 plus donors, Group H for donors from $249,000 to $10,000, followed by Group G YES board and trustees, Group I YES staff and families and Group J alumni.

The groups then repaired to the Sam Adams Brewery for a 1pm program according to the press release.

1201 River St. changes questioned

The Hyde Park Neighborhood Association (HPNA) met on Feb. 6.

Its main appointment illustrated the nonbinding nature of the City of Boston Planning Department's (CBPD) community review process regarding its Article 80 larger scale project applications when representatives of B'nai B'rith Housing – having been invited by the HPNA – presented an update regarding its under-construction project at 1201 River St.

The all-affordable, 55-and-older four-story development will provide 63 one-bedroom apartments. It is also eliminating more than half of the ground floor storefront space on that block of River Street, which is at the epicenter of Hyde Park's downtown shopping district.

Questions were asked after the extremely brief construction presentation, and it soon became clear that project changes had been made after its Boston Planning & Development Agency (BPDA) Board approval, and that they had not involved any community input.

The public portion of the Article 80 application process for 1201 River St. began in mid-November, 2021 and concluded with its BPDA Board approval about two months later. This pro-

Letters to the Editor

SQUARES OUTREACH ISN'T INCLUSIVE

To the Editor:

Squares + Streets is a city-wide, transformative, once-in-a-generation urban development project whose main objective is to address Boston's housing crisis. The initiative in rezoning allows for rapid increase in new residential unit construction within vibrant, transit-rich commercial/residential districts across the city (Cleary Sq.). The initiative has promised community engagement in a planning process which recognizes a given district's unique character while preparing for significant district changes including multi-unit building height up to 5 or 7 stories, mixed commercial/residential building use, and improvements to public spaces, intersections, and transportation infrastructure. In Roslindale, the community engagement process has not been inclusive.

Roslindale is the first of 17 districts across the city to undergo the process of rezoning and face imminent legislative approval of revised, streamlined zoning regulations to be applied in our locale. Yet only a small number of Roslindale residents have closely followed the Roslindale Squares + Streets initiative; a majority of residents remain unaware of the planning or the changes the new zoning regulations will bring to our neighborhood. Public comment on the Planners' Roslindale Draft Small Area Plan has ended. As the first district close to the conclusion of the Boston Planning Department's year-long community planning effort, Roslindale has acted as a testing ground for the Planners to hone strategies for community engagement. So far in Roslindale, even after a year, the Planners' efforts have failed. While they have been successful within a neighborhood sub-sector of predominantly white home-owners, they have made weak and ultimately unsuccessful efforts with non-white residents, many of whom are immigrants, non-native English speakers, renters, and/or low-income earners (they represent around 45% of Roslindale's population).

I believe there is near unanimous agreement across class, race, or language among Boston residents that there is an urgent need for more housing - particularly housing that is affordable. Squares + Streets addresses this need head on. It pays close attention to how the new zoning in the 17 districts will integrate new building parameters and new combinations of residential and commercial building sites into existing neighborhood infrastructure, matches residential density with public transportation, secures open space and pedestrian safety, and more. I count myself among the many in Boston that recognize and support this inevitable and urgent need for devel-

The significant failure of Squares + Streets planning as it has unfolded in Roslindale is the Planners' glaring omission of equitable community representation in their community process. The Roslindale Draft Small Area Plan is based on the Planners' own vision of urban development with input from a small and specific sector of Roslindale residents. Boston has publicly committed itself to ensuring that current Boston residents are able to continue living in Boston into a foreseeable future. It has committed itself to advancing equity through community-led planning and to addressing the significant risk of displacement (a widely recognized result of development) particularly to low-income residents, small businesses, and communities of color. Yet in Roslindale, Squares + Streets Planners yield no added time, and make no meaningful effort to receive input on their plans from the very residents most likely to face displacement.

We read about the helplessness many Americans feel as our nation cruelly embarks on deportation of up to 20 million immigrants, and we frequently hear advice to counteract feelings of helplessness by acting locally. Last week, Boston's City Councilors could not agree on a resolution that no Squares + Streets rezoning should be granted approval until citywide anti-displacement protections are codified, fully funded, and implecluding all of the residential fabric highlighted in yellow on the map." Vision 2 got the most positive feedback, according to CBPD representatives, but the final plan is actually a compromise of the two visions, maximizing development while trying to keep it closer to the commercial core than laid out in Vision 2.

"The land-use and design framework does look to balance the two visions expressed in the community by limiting the proposed growth areas to the commercial core and major streets," said CBPD Planner Abdul-Razak Zachariah. "The plan does clarify that surrounding residential areas will, in the near future, be addressed by the neighborhood zoning initiative."

Also discussed was a reinforcement of the city's past statements that there is currently no plan to redevelop the Taft Hill Public Parking Lot. Deputy Director of Comprehensive Planning Caitlin Coppinger said if there is a future redevelopment of the lot, there will be a concerted public process to make sure residents get their say. It should also be noted that at least one past iteration of this idea involved keeping the public lot, just building housing on top of it, with no loss of parking.

"I just want to clarify that there are no current plans to redevelop the parking lot and the administration stays committed to maintaining it as such," she said. "This plan really outlines future opportunities and planning principles for developing the area. Parcel disposition of public land is one of the ways that we can really leverage affordable housing, so should the option to redevelop this parcel arise, it would be subject to a thorough public engagement process."

Resident Luis Encarnacion said he and the majority of the people in his community do support the plan, however, he said he was less than impressed with the city's anti-displacement plan.

"There are certain things we would like to point to and reevaluate and get a few more details," he said. "Rezoning Washington Street will definitely lead to an increase of property values and it's pushing out long-term renters and small businesses. There are no clear anti-displacement protections. There are no anti-displacement policies or commercial small business protections in place in the proposal as of right now."

Encarnacion said he's also concerned that the plan does not specify how many new housing units would be created, how affordability would be addressed, no estimate on funding resources being provided, and no assessment on how increased density would affect water, sewer, public safety and transit.

CBPD Planner Eileen Michaud said the Anti-Displacement Action Plan governing such issues citywide is expected this winter, and said since there was no development proposal on the table at this time, they have time to publicly go through any anti-displacement protections that might be enacted.

"Those considerations will ideally be more formalized and addressed directly in the recommendations of the Anti-Displacement Action Plan," she said.

Parking was another issue. Resident Nate Stell said he was concerned that pushback on a lack of parking later on in the development process could sink the increased development he supports and the CBPD wants through this plan.

"I'm very supportive of the plan, particularly Community Vision 2; I want more neighbors and businesses here," he said. "However, I implore you not to sleep on parking management. I think it's the biggest blind spot in the plan right now."

Resident Tom MacDonald said there needed to be more engagement and public process for the plan. "It's no fault of the planners; it's a difficult thing to get people to go to meetings, I've heard this from so many administrators I've talked to," he said. "There needs to be some way that everyone in Roslindale knows what's coming before it's legislated."

Resident Ben Bruno said he felt this elongated public process that has already taken place - Michaud said they've extended the process from six-to-nine months to 13 already - has potentially stifled the plan. Resident and former Roslindale Village Main Streets Director Steve Gag said he felt the process has done all that's possible to reach out to the community.

"Having been involved in many, many outreach projects in the community, I have not seen one with this many meetings and this much attention to doing outreach," he said. "It's very hard to get everybody informed in a neighborhood like ours and I understand people's concern about certain populations not being represented how we would like them to be, but at a certain point, in 13 months of literally dozens of meetings and walk-throughs and open times for people to come in and talk, we urgently need this. I would hate to see us pull back because of a concern that not everybody in the neighborhood has heard about this. It's impossible to do that."

The latest released plan for the Billings Field renovations, which is supposed to start construction this spring.

Coming Soon: Billings renovations

Ariane Komyati
Staff Reporter

After four public design meetings over the past two-and-a-half years, the much anticipated improvements to Billings Field are set to begin this spring. Project Manager B. Chatfield explained that the Parks and Recreation Department is currently working towards completing the design drawings. She said after carefully reviewing resident input from the last public meeting in January of 2024, the department anticipates going out to bid in March once the final drawings are submitted.

The last public meeting regarding the Billings Field improvements took place in Jan. 2024. The updated concept proposal included an accessible ramp off of Bellevue Street, new accessible paths throughout the park, minor upgrades to the basketball and tennis/pickleball courts, a splash pad, minor playground upgrades, field upgrades, and a street hockey rink.

Most community members were in favor of the accessible ramp on Bellevue Street, while others stated that “a better use of the funds would be to make the accessible access point at the end of Quinn Way.”

Many community members and residents were vocal about their support for the in-line rink. During last year’s design meeting, Parks and Rec received over 30 comments in support of the rink. Many residents remarked how popular hockey is in WR and that they didn’t want their kids playing it in the streets anymore. Others said that there are too many tennis courts and they would rather see a hockey rink. Another person noted how kids from the community petitioned for this rink. A few representatives from Parkway Youth Hockey also spoke in favor of the rink. “Currently, skating and rollerblading isn’t allowed on the path at Billings. Hopefully with the renovations rollerblading will be allowed on the path so kids can be active in the park, especially on the way to the rink,” one community member said last year.

The Parks and Rec team said it took these comments very seriously. “We heard loudly from the community that if budget becomes an issue – and we don’t know this until it has gone out to bid – that the proposed street hockey rink coming out of the project is not an option. As a result of that conversation, we simplified the design of the LaGrange entrance area – it’s no longer a large plaza – and will therefore be easier and cheaper to build than what we were showing earlier,” said Chatfield.

Chatfield explained that the standard Parks and Rec process begins with presenting the design in “concept” at community meetings, using a colored rendering to illustrate key features. This concept is then developed into detailed, constructible drawings. While there haven’t been any significant changes to the Billings Field improvement plans since the last design meeting, Chatfield said the department has refined the design to make it buildable and now has a drawing set that a contractor can build from.

Parks and Rec is currently reviewing the drawings now. The final concept is due March 14. Chatfield said she anticipates that the project will be going out to bid once the final drawings are submitted. Mass General Law (Chapter 30, Section 39M) requires public projects to be advertised in a publicly-accessible resource—such as CommBuys and The Boston Herald (and the Bulletin Newspapers)—to notify potential bidders. The project documents are then available for two weeks for physical pickup in the Parks and Recreation lobby or through digital access via an online folder.

“At that point, contractors must provide their bids and we open them, review them, and award the project to the lowest responsible and eligible bidder. If all bids are higher than our budget, we approach the budget office to see if further funding is available. If all bids are significantly higher than our budget, we do not award the project, and redesign and rebid,” explained Chatfield.

Parks and Rec expects the project to break ground at the end of June 2025. The budget for the project is currently listed as $500,000.

mented for residents and small businesses: and until neighborhood-specific affordability plans are developed. The resolution was tabled for the time being.

I am surprised that in our forward-thinking, fair-minded city that Councilors were unable to find unanimous agreement that displacement of Boston residents is a risk that constituents across all districts do not condone. Squares + Streets will and should go forward as a needed response to the shortage of housing - but not until anti-displacement measures are in place that protect all residents in Roslindale and across the city. THE RIGHT KIND OF COMMUNITY MEETING

To the Editor:

As I read The Bulletin on January 30, I noticed that both state Rep. Bill MacGregor and District 6 councilor Ben Weber appear at a joint two-hour open house at the Corrib Pub with about a reported 30 constituents showing up to engage with the two elected officials on issues of concern. Kudos to the West Roxbury Business and Professional Association and its President Jimmy Hennigan for putting this event together. Folks who showed up got to listen and talk in a comfortable environment with both appetizers and beverages available too.

As is usual, the big topics up for discussion were the state of public schools in West Roxbury, the road diet on Centre Street and the need for senior centers. It was also a chance for folks from Hyde Park, West Roxbury and Roslindale to communicate with each other, share ideas and form neighborhood bonding.

Hopefully, there will be more of these kinds of community meetings where folks can relax together a bit more than at a large meeting room. A little bit of social gathering can go a long way in solving common issues.

To the Editor:

We don’t know what the 300 people added to the city payroll Mayor Wu were hired to do. It’s clear, however, that fixing potholes and keeping the city clean aren’t in the job descriptions.

cess included one BPDA-led community meeting and a public comment period.

The main community concerns had to do with the elimination of that commercial frontage (the new development was approved for one 1,200-square-foot commercial space on River Street, and knocked out six commercial addresses), off-street parking, and traffic congestion.

The project had been approved for 40 garage/lot parking spaces. Its design also had cars entering the parking area from one abutting side street (Central Avenue) and exiting by way of another (Winthrop Street), thus creating a one-way flow of traffic and an off-street pick-up/drop-off area.

However, during the CBPD's internal design review process that took place after BPDA Board approval, parking was reduced by eight spots, and the Winthrop Street exit was eliminated, leaving Central Avenue as the only entry/exit to the building's parking area.

When asked, B'nai B'rith Housing Project Manager Nathifa Debellotte explained the decision.

"We decided not to do that, especially since you have a lot of pedestrians that walk along Winthrop Street for the YMCA and for the library," she said of the destinations at each end of the dead-end street. "People use that back access, so that access we're keeping for pedestrians."

Central Avenue – like Winthrop Street – is narrow. Unlike Winthrop, it is used as a cut-through by drivers. HPNA Vice President Brian Putnam alluded to that when commenting on the traffic flow impact of pick-up/drop-off services, such as The RIDE and daily meal deliveries, that elderly residents in the 55+ community would likely use, adding that he had found the BPDA Board approved – now-removed – off-street pick-up/drop-off area attractive because of that.

B'nai B'rith Housing Senior Project Manager Holly Grace replied. "We worked very hard with the Mayor's Office on Housing and their design review team, who have extremely strong opinions with a lot of these issues." She touched on the City Hall-led revision process of the BPDA Board approved plan and went on. "So we're going to take these issues very seriously and make sure that our management team has a really good plan, and really good communication with our residents who are going to be moving in once the building is completed."

Debellotte also confirmed – when asked – that parking had been reduced to 32 spots. Grace explained. "When we had to not have vehicular driveway entrance onto Winthrop, we needed some turnaround room, and then the reality of columns, spacing unfortunately made 40 not fit."

HPNA member Craig Martin raised a complaint against both City Hall and B'nai B'rith for making those changes without voluntarily informing the community, leading HPNA President Mimi Turchinetz to ask Mayor's Office of Neighborhood Services Hyde Park Liaison Cecily Graham, "How is it that the community can, in fact, effectively participate in design review?"

In asking, she referred to Squares + Streets (S+S) – the controversial planning and zoning initiative soon to be implemented for the Cleary Square area – for which zoning restrictions will be greatly loosened and, opponents believe, binding community input will be correspondingly reduced.

Resident Miko Andrade followed by commenting on how she would be discouraged to participate in City-Hall initiatives knowing that "the process was devalued and done behind the scenes" without genuine community involvement. "So, if we want collaboration, it needs to be authentic, because I came out of my house to participate, to hear, to engage, but I need to trust the process."

In her reply to both Turchinetz and Andrade, Graham noted that 1201 River St. had been approved prior to the implementation of S+S, and prior to the implementation of the Article 80 modernization plan, and that, moving forward "the focus of the City is to prioritize the voice of our residents and have more community engagement in the process along the way," adding that "this is the goal of the Squares + Streets team and the goal of the Article 80 modernization plan."

Of note is the fact that the BPDA application for 1201 River St. was approved without requiring any zoning relief – a key zoning objective of S+S. The project – as approved – has also significantly reduced the ground-floor commercial footprint that had existed on the site before, which is also built into the language and dynamics of three of the six S+S zoning districts.

Also, according to the Article 80 Modernization Action Plan, after BPDA Board approval, further steps in the review process – which may involve other City agencies – "will remain compliant with the requirements of Board approval." However, "this internal work does not trigger additional community processes or new project changes inconsistent with earlier approvals."

In related news:

A comment period for a small project change to the BPDA Board approved 1318 River St. (Junior's Automotive) will be open until March 6. This change proposes reducing the 30-unit building's garage parking spaces from 30 to 20. To comment, visit www.bostonplans.org, Quick Link to Active Development Projects, search under Hyde years, but when the pandemic hit, it hit the venue hard and it was not able to reopen due to issues with the landlord.

Lavin said Great Scott was originally founded in 1976 and started out as a neighborhood bar with some live music. "Then, college kids discovered Great Scott and descended and swarmed it and it was that type of place for a number of years," he said. "My involvement started in 2003; I started booking shows weekly and it was at that time we sort of hatched the plan to turn Great Scott into a live music venue and cater to a different kind of music fan. We started having some success and the venue's reputation grew in the area regionally and nationally."

Lavin pointed out that touring national acts started at Great

Scott, including Passion Pit, Charlie XCX, Grouplove, Greta Van Fleet, Phoebe Bridgers, Nathaniel Rateliff and the Night Sweats, and comedians like Marc Maron and Nate Bargatze.

"We worked with thousands of bands, hundreds of promoters, all different kinds of music and genres," he said.

This time around, Lavin, Warshaw and Armstrong will own the building so that the rent issues that were reported to have been the venue's downfall will not happen again. It had previously been reported that Great Scott closed because an agreement on rent between the venue and the landlord could not be reached.

IAG member Jake Dempsey asked if in the community benefits package there could be opportunities for young folks in the neighborhood to participate in the local music scene in some fashion. "There are my kids, and the West End House and whatever's going to happen with the Jackson Mann," he said. "I'd love to see if there were ways that this hub of the Boston music scene could be encouraging the next round of upcoming Boston musicians or giving young people of the neighborhood opportunities to be in this space and understand what it means."

Warshaw pointed out that venues are used for about four or five hours a day and he said he'd love to see it get more use. He said they used to work with music schools to hold their recitals at Great Scott in the past, and Lavin said they are in talks with the Allston Village Main Streets (AVMS) to help figure this out with O'Brien's to create some use for the venue during the day now.

"I think it would be natural for both O'Brien's and Great Scott to be able work with organizations like Girls Rock Camp or School of Rock or things along those lines to give them the opportunity to have their showcases and performances," Lavin said, adding that they could also do educational sessions to help aspiring youth learn to sound check and set up shows.

Warshaw said they are also looking to host a contest to determine the outside decorations for the wall on the venue, and said it was not necessarily a permanent fixture and could be changed year to year. He said, however, the one resoundingly popular and memorable feature of the old Great Scott, the green awning, would be replicated to create a sense of connection to the lost concert hall.

IAG member Lizzie Torres asked about having an artist preference to the affordable housing in the building. Warshaw said he had a bias as he is married to an artist and is in favor of the idea.

"However when we first went into talks with folks in the city about artist housing or not, I personally was a little surprised to hear that artist housing is not universally loved and some people feel that too many buildings tried to steer towards artist housing at the expense of other people who need affordable housing," he said. "We are very open. I originally thought it would be great to have the whole first floor of the building, which would be less attractive to some people living above a music venue, open it all up to artists, musicians, actors, just people who are happy to be there and don't mind that they may have live music below them until 1 a.m."

Warshaw said they would love to do it, so long as the community would be behind it.

Boston prepping for winter

Jeff Sullivan
Staff Reporter

The Boston City Council recently met with officials from the city to assess how different departments are preparing for this year's winter weather.

Assistant Superintendent of Highways in Boston, Daniel Nee, spoke for the department during the hearing. District 5 City Councilor Enrique Pepén ran the hearing, as he is the chair of the subcommittee on City Services, Innovation and Technology, and though he allowed that winters have been getting milder in terms of snowfall, there have been historic aberrations, like the 2015 historic snowfall year when the city had 110.3 inches of total snowfall.

"Our snow has become more rain and icy conditions," Pepén said. "How does that change your preparations in the City of Boston?"

"Certainly the last two years has been a trend right?" he said. "But I think I want to see a few more of those years before we start really changing how we prepare. We have to be prepared for the worst case scenario. I mean 2015, I lived through it, barely, with 100-plus inches of snow over four snowstorms back to back to back. Two years after that, we got the most snow in a 24-hour period in Boston's history. We're not completely out of the woods, but there is a change."

Nee said while that is encouraging news, he was more concerned about flash freezing, which is something that's been happening more and more often as Climate Change makes the day-to-day weather variations more extreme.

"I know meteorologists have said that Climate Change will result in more moisture being thrown our way, and I think we saw that a little last year, but we're still hovering around that 32 degrees," he said. "The mist and the quick rainstorms can, once they hit the cold ground, turn into freezing rain. That's really the most dangerous there is. I would take a 12-inch named snowstorm with everybody on TV talking about it and the French Toast Alert (<https://tinyurl.com/32ew9m5y>) 100 times over one flash freeze or a freezing rain storm. Those are dangerous."

Nee said they are working with snow removal providers to get down to the most granular of detail when dealing with storms.

"What's happening on Fairmount Hill is different than Eagle Hill in East Boston; it could be a four-to-five-inch difference and a 5 degree temperature difference so we are paying more attention to hyper local forecasting, which helps too," he said.

District 4 City Councilor

Brian Worrell asked about a program in Lincoln where the Town would have drums of sand in the Town Hall so the businesses would have free access to friction when shoveling the sidewalk.

Nee said they have them at MBTA stops and stations, but he said the Boston Department of Public Works (DPW) doesn't currently do that.

"I think through 311 we respond to snow removal pretty quickly," he said. "It's not a bad idea, but I think the scope of the program – who gets it and who doesn't get it and how is it used – could be a problem. It's something we could look into."

The Massachusetts College of Art and Design (MassArt) will undergo a comprehensive evaluation visit on March 16-19, 2025, by a team representing the New England Commission of Higher Education (formerly the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, NEASC).

The New England Commission of Higher Education is one of seven accrediting commissions in the United States that provide institutional accreditation on a regional basis. Accreditation is voluntary and applies to the institution as a whole. The Commission, which is recognized by the U.S. Department of Education, accredits approximately 220 institutions in the six-state New England region as well as several other states and American-style institutions overseas.

MassArt has been accredited by the Commission since 1950 (approximately) and was last reviewed in Spring 2017. Its accreditation by the Commission encompasses the entire institution.

For the past year and a half, MassArt has been engaged in a process of self-study, addressing the Commission's Standards for Accreditation. An evaluation team will visit the institution to gather evidence that the self-study is thorough and accurate. The team will recommend to the Commission a continuing status for the institution. Following a review process, the Commission itself will take the final action.
